

Students interact directly with Toastmasters counselors, professional workshop instructors, and other seasoned business leaders in biweekly meeting sessions. Every one has a speaking role, and suggestions for improvement and individual feedbacks are received immediately after performance.

“Learning by doing” and “immersion” to develop leadership and public communication skills

Founded by volunteer parents, our club strives to help our younger generations develop their communication, social and leadership skills through classroom discussions, exercises and active participation in community services and humanitarian activities. Meeting biweekly year-long, students also develop lifelong friendship with peers, counselors, instructors, and business leaders.

Leadership and Public Communication Development

